There are many practical purposes for implementing green infrastructure including increased stormwater control, enhanced energy efficiency, and improved water, soil, and air quality. Additionally, green infrastructure beautifies landscapes and reduces heat stress in urban environments, hosting several long-term benefits at a relatively low cost.

This course will be led by Brian Wethington, Green Infrastructure Project Manager, City of Denver and Tom Liptan, Green Infrastructure Consultant, LIVE Center and will provide a comprehensive overview of green infrastructure terminology, planning and site selection, design, modeling, construction, maintenance, and monitoring while providing a number of real world examples and looking at the barriers and solutions to green infrastructure implementation in your region.

LEARNING OUTCOMES

- Define green infrastructure and associated terminology clearly
- Identify the issues that green infrastructure aims to solve
- Define the different types of green infrastructure systems and how they treat stormwater
- Outline your communities water resources, regulatory landscape around green infrastructure, and identify water quality contaminants that you are looking out for
- Review site selection and initial planning process
- Discuss testing and implementation
- Review response planning – what happens if the plants die?
- Compare case studies and examples: Denver, Portland, Tabor to the River, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Seattle
