Many items impact the reliability of a utility system and vegetation is typically one of the largest. Our industry often discusses best management practices, new technologies and tools available to improve our vegetation management programs, but we rarely can get together in the same room to discuss solutions. By focusing on a systematic approach to right of way integrated vegetation management, this program will focus on sharing advanced solutions that have worked for complex problems in vegetation management facing utilities in the United States.

The goal of this course is to look at how specific challenges impact reliability and how utilities can reduce that impact, specifically the role of utilities in environmental stewardship along the right of ways (ROW) .

LEARNING OUTCOMES

- Discuss how technology and data analytics are changing Integrated Vegetation Management (IVM) and Utility Vegetation Management (UVM) standards
- Demonstrate how IVM and sustainability go hand in hand
- Explain techniques to manage ROWs in eco-sensitive areas
- Explain pollinator health and identify the challenges
- Explain the benefits associated with an ecosystem – based approach to IVM
- Explain the value and necessity of environmental stewardship in the ROW
- Examine the positive and negative effects of herbicides in ROW
- Identify and explain FERC Standards in IVM
